

It's Never Enough

By The Movement Factory

The human being is never satisfied with what he has. You always want what you do not have, and do not know how to appreciate what you do have.

Analyzing this dilemma, the work is based on human behavior when faced with what you want versus what you have. Emphasizing how important it is to define what things are important and what are not necessary.

It is an exposure to consumerism that is affecting all of us. The project asks for a reflection of our consumerism not just of material things, but persons, relationships, goals, and that insatiable search to obtain the same without really knowing when enough is enough and basing our happiness or success on everything we have and not on who we are.
